

“WE SHOULD TALK”

Hear ProAct participants share their stories about finding and keeping their jobs

A work ethic, determination, support and the will to go on— parents and guardians of ProAct consumers are invited for a special evening with a panel of ProAct participants who work in the community.

This fourth session of “We Should Talk,” on June 1, offers experiences, tips and real world advice that can help others achieve more.

ProAct is there to support people every step of the way, both before and after employment, with interview and resume prep, regular site visits, connections with management and coaching. Panelists will each bring a unique perspective that families won’t want to miss.

And, as disability funding debates conclude at the Capitol, President Steve Ditschler will provide a short recap and his observations. “While we likely won’t receive raises for direct support staff, there are positive elements for us in the draft budgets,” said Ditschler. “But we’ll need to see how it all comes out in the end.”
